Beware of These Common Scams

Nigerian Scams - People claiming to be officials, businessmen or surviving relatives of former government officials in countries around the world send countless offers via e-mail, attempting to convince consumers that they will transfer thousands of dollars into your bank account if you will just pay a fee or "taxes" to help them access their money. If you respond to the initial offer, you may receive documents that look "official." Unfortunately, you will get more e-mails asking you to send more money to cover transaction and transfer costs, attorney's fees, blank letterhead and your bank account numbers and other sensitive, personal information.

Secret Shopper Scams - The most recent scams involved people receiving checks for over $1000 from Walmart with instructions to spend a couple hundred dollars at Walmart and send the rest back to them to cover expenses. The Walmart checks were fraudulent and caused people a lot of money troubles.

Online Dating Scams - This scam involves internet dating sites. The scammer will talk to you, become your boyfriend or girlfriend, send you pictures, and might even visit you. They get to know you and then ask for money. They might tell you that they are stuck in a foreign country for their job and you need to send them money right away so that they can come visit you. The victims of this type of scam have sent thousands of dollars overseas only to find out that their "boyfriend" or "girlfriend" was part of a fraud ring. Be very weary of dating people who are overseas.
